

The grave danger is, of course, that of pestilence. Rumors of serious sickness among the survivors quarantined in the concentration camp at the Presidio are in circulation, but according to Major Krauthoff, chief of the military police, who has practical charge of the various camps, that is not so. He states that, of course, many persons, driven to the verge of insanity by their terrible experiences of the last few days, are so completely exhausted that they require medical care, but he does not believe the fear that smallpox or diphtheria will break out and become epidemic is well founded.

Water Famine Lifted.

At this hour the fire has died down in every section of the city, and in the west end, where the gravest fears were felt, the fire is well-nigh extinguished. The Spring Valley Water Company's plant is in good operation; all of the necessary connections to the main have been made, and thousands of gallons of pure water are on hand, either to be used for fire-fighting purposes or sanitation. Already the work of clearing the ruins is in progress. Men who up to this sad catastrophe counted their wealth in the hundreds of thousands are working side by side with others who have always been compelled to depend upon the remuneration of their daily toil for means of subsistence. All are cheerful, however, and hopeful of the future. It is to come when the city shall rise again. The absence of artificial light is now the most serious drawback to the situation. With the destruction of all gas mains and the carrying down of all electric wires the result has been that the population has been compelled to depend upon lamps and candles for lighting purposes.

No Fires Allowed in Residences.

General Funston today was compelled to order the troops to force the residents of a large number of dwelling houses to vacate their homes, as he feared some might try to use demolished chimneys for fires. Although this was a hardship on the face of it, the action was necessary, and the people were quick to bow to the will of the troops. All persons left in the city today ate their meals in the open, they being prepared in the middle of the streets in order to avoid any chance of a renewal of the fire.

Sailors' Arrival Was Timely.

A great deal of help was given by all of the sailors and marines from the Pacific squadron, who were sent ashore by Admiral Goodrich, and ordered to co-operate with the military and city authorities. The advent of these men was a godsend. The soldiers from the Presidio, the city officials, and the police and fire departments of San Francisco, had done noble work, but exhausted nature could no more, and so soon as these fresh men put in an appearance today, the men, who for three days have been doing yeoman service, getting the situation under control, were given a chance to rest. So tired were they that they lay down to sleep in the grass of the parks, and even on the hard concrete pavements without covering of any kind.

Dead Only San Franciscans.

For the first time since the catastrophe General Funston and the city authorities were able to devote a few moments to try to learn where the casualties took place. They were unable to estimate what the death list is, but they ask the press associations to assure the outside world that when the gruesome list is made up it will be found to contain only the names of San Franciscans. Those who met death lost their lives in the poorer quarters of the city, and many of the victims were crushed by the earthquake thrown down upon them like da.

Guests All Safe.

Guests of the big hotels got their lost all of their effects, but inasmuch as they lived, they had something to thank for. George Toomey, who is in the hospital corps at the city, asked that all available spies be rushed to the city, being done. Volunteer physicians all along the coast are receiving reports to him, and with the local medical corps they are expected to enforce the strictest of sanitary measures, and each bears a signed order, on the command of the troops authorizing him to call upon the soldiers to compel everyone to respect the order.

HOW ARTISTS USE PEN AND INK LINES

EIGHTH ARTICLE

This is the eighth of the series of articles on pen and ink drawing which The Sunday Times is publishing, illustrated with sketches by Charles Dana Gibson.

Charles Dana Gibson's picture which accompanies today's paper is actually a portrait of a famous beauty. The girl who posed for it was one of the most popular models among artists before she won continental fame by becoming the wife of a Pittsburgh millionaire. Her rare and piquant beauty appealed to artists, for it was just what they wanted. Good models are difficult to find, and this was a gem. She posed often for Gibson, and her portrait may be recognized in many of his pictures, but this is the most characteristic of all, and also the best likeness.

It is a dainty little face full of character, and exquisitely drawn. Her eyes have an expression which tells its own story; she can tease and tantalize until a man is half crazy; she is fond of fun, has a bright wit, and is a thoroughly good fellow. But there are unsounded depths in those eyes that suggest infinite possibilities in the way of love. While she is a type, she is not a type, for no malice in her coquetry and she looks as if she might cling as the ivy to the oak, were she to fall in love with a man who really loved her.

The way in which this face is drawn is an excellent example of Gibson's best style. The lines which give form to the features follow closely the natural lines of the face, and there is little attempt at cross-hatching. The lines upon the cheeks are admirable, in that they give all the effect of softness. The lines upon the lips are curved just sufficient to give the effect of the smooth, rounded surface, the moisture, and the redness. It is the highest triumph of pen-and-ink drawing to be able to suggest color; and these lips certainly look deep red.

The student will do well to observe the way in which the tip of the nose, the nostrils and the shadow of them upon the upper lip are handled, with how few lines and with what precision. To appreciate thoroughly the excellence of this bit of drawing, the picture should be placed at a little distance and looked at through half-closed eyes, when the lines will vanish and leave only soft shadows, as soft as if made with a brush.

Such a picture as this has value not alone as a work of art, but as a portrait of a very famous beauty.

Instructions. There is grave danger of an epidemic of pneumonia, and in order to avoid this stimulants are given under the directions of the doctors wherever they are needed.

The devastated district which is a mass of smoldering ruins, gray with ashes and black with smoke, is still so warm that but little can be done toward searching for valuables or corpses.

The lack of cash will not be overcome until Monday at the earliest. Every bank in the city is buried in ruins, but it is believed that the cash surplus and valuable stocks, bonds, etc., are safe in the vaults, which, for the most part were of the most modern fireproof construction.

Superintendent Leach, of the United States mint, is making ready to open that structure and already has honored some telegraphic transfers of money. The subtreasury is a mass of debris, but its vaults are intact and a large force of men are at work trying to clear it out.

At a meeting of several of the heads of the banking institutions today it was decided to draw upon their representatives in other cities for funds needed, and the banks will open as soon as possible in tents provided for the purpose by the troops and under guard of soldiers.

The courage of the financiers is unprecedented and the receipt of cheering messages offering aid from the East has made them feel that they will be able to meet all obligations.

By direction of Chief of Police Dinnan the Berkeley cadets and the militia have been excused from further service as guards. The local police and the regular troops aided by the sailors and marines are now considered able to cope with the situation.

From the tower of the Ferry House all that can be seen is the smoldering ruins, extending for two miles in every direction. Where there were broad thoroughfares on Tuesday there are now debris-strewn lanes and about the only buildings standing in the destroyed district that are fit for use again is the Hall of Records, the Mint, the half wrecked postoffice, and half a dozen tall office buildings.

The Ferry House was saved with great difficulty, as were the grain sheds and the fifteen large warehouses on the docks near it. They were saved from last night's fire by the work of fire tugs, ferryboats, whose pumps were used, the cruiser Chicago and a number of other harbor craft.

The fire to the north was put out before that part of the water front lying west of the foot of Powell street had been destroyed. The entire western addition lying west of Van Ness avenue is standing unscathed, although damaged by the earthquake. In the section north of Market street the ruined section is bounded on the west by Van Ness avenue, although "L" shaped apertures have been left by fires that ran through wooden structures there. The Van Ness avenue burned line runs northerly to Greenwich street, which is a few blocks from the bay. Then the boundary goes up over the Telegraph hill and down that portion of the shore which faces Oakland.

Practically everything in the district bounded by Market street, Van Ness avenue, Greenwich street, and the bay is in ashes. On the east side of Hyde street hill, the fire burned down to Bay street and Montgomery alley, where it was stopped. South of Market street, with exceptions in the vicinity of the Pacific Mail docks, also stretch ruins. This section, which is bounded on the north by Market street, runs south to Guerrero street goes out that way two blocks, turns west to Dolores, runs west six blocks to near Twenty-second, then goes in an irregular course southward, spreading south as far as 25th street, and going down that way to the southerly bay shore.

MRS. COREY MAY BE ENTRAPPED IN RUINS

Wife of Steel Magnate Making Auto Tour Was Due in Frisco Wednesday.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., April 21.—It is not yet known whether Mrs. W. E. Corey, wife of the president of the United States Steel Corporation, was in San Francisco the morning of the disaster. If she adhered to her schedule, she with her sister-in-law, Mrs. Ida Corey, and her mother-in-law, would have reached California Wednesday morning. Mrs. Joseph E. Schwab, sister-in-law of Charles M. Schwab, is believed to have been at the Cliff House in San Francisco.

The movements of Mrs. W. E. Corey are causing alarm because they were so timed to bring her and her sister-in-law and mother-in-law within the limits of San Francisco when the first rumble of the earthquake was heard. She had begun an ambitious automobile tour to Pittsburgh, and already the party had conquered the sage brush wilds of Nevada and the highways of California.

Other details of the San Francisco fire and earthquake will be found on pages 4, 5, 7, and 8.

LIFE INSURANCE FUNDS TO REBUILD

Francisco, I feel quite certain that the Mutual and other great life insurance companies will be willing to lend large sums for investment for the rehabilitation of the stricken city.

Paul Morton, president of the Equitable Life, stated that he did not care to discuss the matter of Equitable investment in the rebuilding of San Francisco, until the matter had been settled by a meeting of the board of directors.

Fire Companies Lose Heavily.

A staggering loss has been inflicted upon the fire insurance companies of this country and abroad as a result of the fire, but that in itself has added to the surety of the rebuilding of the city. From figures furnished by E. H. A. Correa, vice president of the Home Insurance Company, it is now known that San Francisco was insured for $238,000,000. This loss, however, will not be total, as part of the city has been saved, and there will be some salvage. The fire insurance companies will probably have to stand a loss of at least $150,000,000, and every penny of that amount is expected to be used in the construction of the steel, brick, and stone, and concrete city that building experts declare can be built both earthquake and fireproof.

"The earthquake and fire destruction in San Francisco," said Mr. Correa, "is the most staggering blow ever administered to the insurance companies of the world. In the Chicago fire the loss was $100,000,000, and scores of companies were wiped out. Some never paid, some paid in proportion to their ability, and some paid by assessments on their stockholders."

Spring Footwear

The glorious weather of the past week has sent everybody scurrying for the lighter-weight and cooler footwear.

This shoe shop has never before been quite so busy.

And never have the fashions been quite so captivating—quite so distinctively original.

Such an assortment.

There isn't a style missing that appeals to good taste. There are dozens of novelties—some extreme—some conservative—all within the bounds of sensibility.

Perhaps the most sought-for sorts are the "Venus" Pumps, but the demand is closely approached by the call for "Alexandra" Ties, "Sailor" Ties, "Paris" Ties, "Gibson" Ties, "Christy" Ties, "Jessica" Ties, in all dull and brilliant leathers, in a vast assortment of effects.

For those who will take part in the many weddings scheduled for the coming week we are showing a complete assortment of slippers in many materials and in over a hundred shades. We show here every sort of footwear needed for the trousseau.

Mothers who are preparing the little ones for the coming May Balls should by all means see our magnificent showing of footwear for such wear.
